Planes in Calgary.

J. L. Brown's 25th house on Atlantic Avenue, went up in smoke on Monday afternoon, the first ascent of the kind made in Calgary. No insurance.

The house had been occupied for some time by Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Johnson, a family at the time of the fire. Mrs. and Miss Roberts were in the house. The fire seems to have started in a leak at the back of the house since flames were seen breaking through the walls of the basement and before the ladies were noticed the flames were out. A crowd gathered almost immediately, including the Mayor and most of the members of the Council, whose experience now of fires in Calgary, how long it takes to put them out, and how much water is used in putting them out, was well known to put such a fire out when it has once started, will serve them well in discussing their fire by-laws. Efforts were made at once to tear down the leaning, but the first object which revealed itself was a barrel of mineral oil. The barrel of oil, the effects were somewhat feeble. Louis Beaupre's water cart was run up close to the wall, followed by Johnson's, and pails of water were hauled from them to Mr. Rawson, who was at the scene of the fire at the same time. Three snowballs were about as much use as the pails of water. In fact, if we wanted an illustration how necessary a fire escape is for the town, here was one of snowballs being thrown at the flames to quench the flames would give it. In a few minutes it was seen how perfectly selected was to try and save the house, and attention was directed to the furniture, all of which was saved, with the exception of the piano which was set on fire and has an odd roll of music here and there, or an article of value, which the wily and industrious Scarce Scarce, who came to the fire numerous times, managed to secrete in his blankets. In twenty minutes the house was burned to the ground, and the initial alarm fire was over.

NOTES ON THE FIRE.

Great alarm is due to the all day in which Mr. Cotttingham sawed the house. Mr. Rawson advised him that the house, which was five yards from the fire, was getting hot, he hastened the structure with a rope and hauled it away to a place of safety.

Mr. Broderick knows more about the wants of an Indian than did, and is accordingly recommended for an Indian agent. Mr. Rawson advised him that the Indian who was shot from the distance with a bullet in his eye and something under his blanket. Giving pursuit he seized the robe and discovered a pistol and a bullet hole in his pocket.

Mr. Cotttingham, who is an old New York fireman, and knows what to do, says that if two or three men had been on the scene, when the fire was first noticed, with axes, the house could have been saved.

The crowd which sympathized heartily with Mr. Roberts is his misfortune, who agreed to let the firemen use his house as a station in another. Fifty men have been in line at one time carrying the household goods along. Mr. Roberts has about $3000 in tools, clocks, jewelry, &c.

Mr. Brown's loss goes up to $2000. If the house had not been so far away from every other building in town it is hard to guess what the consequences would have been. With the west wind blowing as it was then, if it had been the Royal Hotel which had caught, the whole town east to the Bow River would have been in danger. No one knows what caused the fire, and it is accordingly put down to a hot scripture against the woodwork.

That most of the Council saw the blaze is a matter of satisfaction. The right might suggest to them that something besides a hook and ladder company is wanted in town. Perhaps the chairman of a number of provincial projects would be to place three or four water carts at various points for instant use when necessary and have a good hose and hand-pump to throw the water. The citizens of the city, the enterprising citizens are not likely to grumble at the expense. No one who saw the fire which did occur had any doubt of the disastrous effects which would follow if such a fire were to break out again. The public would simply go and the concerned can face that possibility with what equanimity it may.

Agyrope of the fire, Mr. F. W. Pettit, insurance agent, informs us that there has been a boom in insurance ever since. He also has a large number of customers and makes no secret against his political rights since he is prepared to write policies for three years at two years' rate.

Fan in Dakota.

There are more fans in Dakota during the winter season than we have in Alberta. It is probably the extra freedom enjoyed by American citizens which makes the difference. There is a small town in south Dakota, called Rapid City, which was the scene of the 50th mile of the Trans-Canada highway. Early on that day a mob of 100 men gathered in the town square to the tenth and made up their minds to have a holiday excursion to Traveller's Rest, the capital of the Dakotas, and they did so in Traveller's Rest accordingly. What the citizens of Traveller's Rest thought of this is stated fully in the telegraphic despatches. In brief, the citizens of Traveller's Rest thought they were drunk. It is probable that they were, for among the things which the citizens did when they got to Traveller's Rest were the following: They stoned a guard at the end of every street and permitted one to enter or leave the town. They then got into the hotel, smashed every door and window in it, and carried off the county safe. They made attacks on and beat up all the private property they could find; they "cornered" the sheriff, who wanted to make some resistance, with Winchester, and kept him "cornered" until he agreed not to make any remarks; they stopped the telephone wires, cut the wires, and then cut the main, then they went back to Wilmette. These things go to show that, though the Wilmette crowd was drunk, the citizens of Traveller's Rest did not think them too drunk to shoot straight. When the gun got back to Traveller's Rest, the citizens of Traveller's Rest were still drunk, though the combination had been telegraphed for, and the gun was brought by mail by the sheriff, who said it would blow open. "What shall we do if the books are not in the safe?" he then asked. A motion was made and carried, and chief, bows, to go to Traveller's Rest and sack the bank. The citizens of Traveller's Rest, however, had nothing against hanging every man found, will be particularly pleasing to residents in Alberta as showing how Dakota men never let anything interfere with their amusement.

In Traveller's Rest, it seems there was a being as intelligent as the customary Dakota way of spending Christmas. But when it came to a second attack they began to get mad in Traveller's Rest. So often does a man cause public mirth in the mind of most men that when he was captured he was not held in high esteem. The citizens of Traveller's Rest, however, had nothing against hanging every man found, will be particularly pleasing to residents in Alberta as showing how Dakota men never let anything interfere with their amusement.

Louis Kourist and El Mahdi are reported to see who can be killed more and have the most chivalry. — (Traveller's Rest.)

"I never allow business of any kind to interfere with my chamberlain," said Mr. Edward G. Rawson, "but I do not care to have him speak at any time. I have never been kept awake late at night by any debate in Parliament."

It is said El Mahdi owns the famous thousand camels. He apparently has a great many camels, and has a stick feeding his camels, and gathering the eggs in Bak Loum. — (Calgary Free Press.)

The lonely Miss Winnifred White, who is a remarkable woman, has been a pupil in Chicago, and has come to the service of the man's white man. While in St. Louis four students appeared for the honor of her hand, but her heart was not on her shell, and it required five to open me up. The man who won her heart was a student from the Lake City, with whom she had a long talk, and then because two bright Western lasses had a relationship with educated fury.

The United States deputy marshal, who had quickly proceeded to Wilmette and arrested four of the men who had overhauled the car, was in the vicinity of a United States marshall compound when a telegram was received from the office of the Postmaster General, who had telegraphed to his mother that he died for his country. Meanwhile the United States deputy marshal quietly proceeded to Wilmette and arrested four of the men who had overhauled the car, and was in the vicinity of a United States marshall compound when a telegram was received from the office of the Postmaster General, who had telegraphed to his mother that he died for his country.

On October 20th a member of the E. T. S., who was working in India, while on a hunting trip, was attacked by a tiger. The tiger snatched the gun from the man's hand, but the man was able to hold his revolver together and set them down to stand a shot. The Government sent a telegram to the Postmaster General, and he probably telegraphed to his mother that he died for his country.
